AutoCamp, the style-forward, Airstream-based hotel minichain, is moving just outside of Yosemite National Park, and roughing it is not required. The new 35-acre retreat, dreamed up by Anacapa Architecture and San Francisco-based Geremia Design, is the hospitality brand's largest and most secluded property yet, rounding out its Russian River Valley and Santa Barbara locations. Beginning in February, guests can trailblaze and stargaze before retiring to one of 20 luxury tents, three cabin suites or 80 deluxe Airstream trailers on-site, all outfitted with Coyuchi sheets and handmade Chilean textiles. 6323 CA-140, Midpines, 888-405-7553. THE TENNIS PLAYERS CHILDREN MODEL THE ADIDAS STAN SMITH MILLENNIAL SNEAKER IN 2002.

GRAND SLAM

The ubiquitous footprint that Stan Smith sneakers have left on fashion is traced in Stan Smith: Some People Think I'm a Shoe (Rizzoli New York, $55) written by the namesake tennis player who was once ranked No. 1 in the world. Spanning about 50 years, the history of the classic white, green-trimmed Adidas shoe is celebrated in street-style photos, rap songs, Bollywood movies, and collaborations with Yohji Yamamoto, Raf Simons and Pharrell Williams, the latter of whom penned the book's foreword. CLEAN JEAN

With dye-contaminated rivers top of mind, surfer Kelly Slater swore off denim when he co-founded Outerknown, his Culver City-based, sustainably manufactured apparel line. Then he and his team discovered Saïtex, a fully transparent, eco-conscious factory in Vietnam that recycles 98 percent of its water, uses the last 2 percent of sludge to make building blocks and air-dries the bulk of its denim. "We stripped everything back and started from the ground up," Slater says. The result: S.E.A. (Social Environmental Accountability) Jeans crafted from organic cotton (sourced from Italy's Candiani and Turkey's Isko mills) and available in three fits—with unlimited free repairs. Go ahead and wear them out. E.V.

EDGE OF GLORY

Yosemite's El Capitan, the 3,000-foot granite pinnacle of the rock climbing world, serves as the arresting backdrop of Free Solo, National Geographic's gravity-defying and heart-stopping account of elite climber Alex Honnold's bare-handed ascent of the monolith. Filmmaker Elizabeth Chai Vasarhelyi and her husband, photographer and co-director Jimmy Chin, capture the Sacramento native's record-setting feat in this film, including Honnold's methodical preparation for the rope-free, gearless climb that defines free soloing. It's an unprecedented triumph worth witnessing as much for the realization of a seemingly impossible dream as the halting beauty of Yosemite. In theaters now. 6.K.

GOOD LIBATIONS

Brandy lovers, take note: The often underrated spirit is making a comeback, at least if NoMad sommelier Thomas Pastuszak and PDT (New York City and Hong Kong) master bartender Jeff Bell have anything to do with it. The duo's premium spirit, Bertoux Brandy, is blended in California and made especially for mixing. "It's a touch lighter than its European counterparts," says Bell, crediting the Golden State's vast grape varieties and climatic diversity. Order up a Bertoux-infused classic at Los Angeles' drinking den Harvard & Stone, or take a note from Bell and craft an autumnal-inspired cocktail with nutmeg and allspice for a festive nightcap. 6.K.

After making her mark on the world of online retail with the launch of startup shopping app Spring and e-commerce destination BeachMint, Ara Katz has set her sights on a new frontier: the human microbiome. Founded by Katz and expert Raja Dhir (with the help of a team of esteemed scientists and entrepreneurs), Venice-based Seed is challenging the growing probiotic industry with its gender-specific Daily Synbiotic supplements. Loaded with both probiotics (restores or maintains good bacteria) and prebiotics (promotes the growth of said bacteria), the science-driven formulations not only improve digestive, dermatological and cardiovascular health, but boost immune system function, too. Visvim founder Hiroki Nakamura showcases his traditional Japanese-meets-Americana designs in his first Los Angeles flagship. Dubbed Visvim Exposition, the new 3,000-square-foot space in the landmark Bradbury Building highlights Nakamura's workwear, as well as his concept line, F.I.L. Indigo Camping Trailer, and Contrary Dept—a utility clothing-inspired brand created exclusively for L.A. "I am always inspired by older things, whether they are actual garments or cars, signs and buildings," Nakamura says of the shop, which features a 1950s Airstream and antiques by woodworker and furniture maker George Nakashima. 304 S.
